Criticizing a Young Lady. "She would be a pretty girl for but one thing."

"What's that?" asked Charley. "George—Her face is always covered with purple and red blotches."

Charley—Oh, that's easily enough disposed of. Used to be the same way myself, but I caught on to the trouble one day, and got rid of it in no time.

George—What was it?

Charley—Simple blood eruptions. Took a short course of P. P. P. I tell you, it's the best blood corrector. The governor had rheumatism as bad that you could hear him holler clear across the country every time he moved. He tried it, and you know what an excellent old cure he is now. If somebody would give Miss Daisy a pointer, she would thank them after wards. All the drug stores sell it."

HE DIED THROUGH SHAME!

A Victim of Over-Sensitiveness Joins the Great Unseen Majority.

They were sitting at a table in one of Scranton's most popular restaurants the other day, waiting for an after-dinner drink, when the elder of the two remarked:

"By the way, what's become of young James? I don't see him around any more."

"Didn't you know he died a week or ten days ago?" replied his companion.

"Dead? Dead? He's the last man I would have thought of dying. How did it happen? Did he meet with an accident?"

"Well, you see, it's merely the old story of youthful indiscretion over again. As you know, James was unusually sensitive and for some time past, kept his feelings to himself. He had a family and friends should get word of his indiscretion. Finally, he was completely broken up and took to his bed. His health, the family doctor, was called in and at last pronounced the case hopeless. Now he's dead; that's all there's to it."

"What a shame! That young man's life could have been saved, even at the eleventh hour."
